both nations in the past and is a pleasant augury for the future. As it is to France and the United States that the spread of popular government in Europe is largely due, so it is but appropriate that an enduring monument at this gateway of the world's commerce should remind all the people of the fact, and the artist has caught the inspiration of history. The conception of Liberty Enlightening the World is deeply poetic, because it is deeply true and because the idea is a great one; its grandeur demands its association with the girantic in art, which has a beauty of its own, and beyond the canons of strict criticism. May it stand as an imperishable monument of the ideas with which it is associated, which are themselves innermost and unchangeable.

Mr. Frederick R. Condert spoke in substance as follows:

The splendid gift which these gentlemen have carried from their own soil to find a home in our bay, is not the gift of a King, nor an Emperor, nor any government whatever, but the spontaneous offering of a people, and of the only people who stood sponsors for the infant Nation that needed help as no nation ever did before. This bronze memento typifies and perpetuates the common aspiration of two great nations, and symbolizes the hope that only they and their children shall see and live in sight of Liberty's torch, but that all nations and all people shall be warmed and made happy by its rays.

more than twenty years ago. But the party in power insists that its ancient crime must be ignored because it was long ago, and claims to have changed its character. Is it so? Then what mean these Democratic sneers when the Ohio Republican Convention arraigns the Democratic party before the party of public opinion for a crime continuing to this day, for having gained the power by a deliberate suppression of the ballot?

That is not an ancient crime. The men who elected Mr. Cleveland by asset are even now erowding the White House and the departments, their hands yet.
